Data stolen in Kensington and Chelsea cyber attack

A spokesperson said the attack was carried out "with criminal intent" and said residents to be wary of unexpected calls, messages, links or attachments, or anyone claiming to be from the council asking for sensitive details. They said small samples of the data accessed by hackers showed some of it was likely to contain sensitive data and personal information.

Personal data of thousands stolen in attack on London councils

Residents should be especially alert to unexpected emails or messages asking for financial or personal information – particularly those that imply a sense of threat or urgency; ignore any unsolicited attachments or links; and interrogate any inbound contacts from individuals purporting to be from RBKC Council who ask for sensitive details.

ChatGPT Health feature draws concern from privacy critics over sensitive medical data

More than 230 million people worldwide already ask ChatGPT health and wellness questions each week, the blog post said, underscoring what the company says is strong consumer demand for a dedicated health product. But health information is uniquely sensitive, advocates said, and data shared with ChatGPT Health will not be protected by the Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act (HIPAA), a landmark health data privacy law.
