ICO Warns of Student-Led Data Breaches in UK Schools

Over half (57%) of insider data breaches in UK schools are caused by students, with many children being set up for “a life of cybercrime,” a new report from the Information Commissioner’s Office (ICO) has found.

Data subject access request ‘obstruction’ warning

Individuals have a general right, under UK data protection law, to access information from organisations about the personal data they hold about them and pertaining to the processing of their personal data. Where requests for such access are made – DSARs – they must be handled in accordance with strict rules set out in data protection law.

Plex urges users to change passwords after data breach

The company said in a post on Monday that it was aware of a security incident involving the theft of Plex customer account information, including user names, email addresses, scrambled passwords, and unspecified authentication data.
